Reflection on the Gospel

A student once told me that she prefers to think Heaven is crowded. I had to differ because of John 14:2-3, where Jesus had prepared a place for each and every one of us. After a few days, perhaps she isn't wrong about it. It's a splendid picture of being in a place crowded with good people; your family, friends, and others that you think are in Heaven.

Trusting in Jesus is something easy to say, but to have it a part of our stories of life is another story. Today's gospel passage comes from the Last Supper Discourses; here we see the disciples needing something concrete they can depend on. However, Jesus steers the conversation into dependence on himself. Thomas asking for directions, Jesus responds that he is the way, the life, and the truth (Jn 14:6). Philip asking to be shown the Father, Jesus responds that he is doing his Father's works, not his own (14:10).

Jesus' ministry brings or reminds us of God's love for us. Like any relationship, it goes both ways. As if we truly love God, we will do the same works as Jesus does. If one looks at the Creation of Adam by Michelangelo, we see God stretching out his arm to barely touch Adam with his finger, while Adam barely lifts his hand to reach God. The Father indeed loves us with his entire being, but our love for God sometimes is like Adam's hand.

God truly loves us that he sent his Only Son, his way of stretching out his arm to us. We can do many things in the Father's name; curing the sick, feeding the hungry, many things we can show God's love to others. Such splendid actions are only possible if we love Jesus, even continuing his works.
